The Program
Georgia State University students may now study for one or two full semesters at Jean-François Champollion University in Albi, a lovely town of about 70,000 people on the Tarn River in southwestern France, in the heart of the historic Languedoc region. Organized around a 13th-century cathedral and a historical center with well-preserved medieval and renaissance buildings, Albi was recently designated a UNESCO heritage town. Just an hour by train from Toulouse, Albi provides easy access to other parts of France, Spain, and the Mediterranean coast. Courses at Jean-François Champollion’s modern and compact campus are offered in English in American and British literature, linguistics, and history. Students may also take French language courses especially designed for non-native speakers. Classes are small, and foreign students quickly integrate into university life. GSU students in Albi will have the opportunity to immerse themselves in French culture, gain a European perspective on literature and history, and explore Europe.
